

Family Circle of Competence Worksheet

Map what your family understands, what needs research, and what stays outside the circle.

Principle: A circle of competence is defined by the boundaries of what you genuinely understand. The goal is not a large circle. The goal is an honest one.

Inside our circle Businesses, products, industries, or customer habits we can explain.	Learning zone Areas we could understand after focused research.	Outside for now Areas we cannot explain or evaluate confidently.

Family discussion prompts

What products or services does our family use often enough to understand the customer experience?	Notes: _____
Can each person explain, in plain language, how one candidate business earns money?	Notes: _____
What facts would we need before moving an idea from the learning zone into our circle?	Notes: _____
Which warning signs mean an idea should remain outside our circle?	Notes: _____
Who will research each open question, and when will we review it together?	Notes: _____

Our family boundary statement

We will consider an investment only when we can explain the business, identify the important risks, and state what evidence could prove us wrong.

Our additional rule: _____

This worksheet supports family learning and discussion. It is not personal financial advice or an investment recommendation.
